

Is aging a disease?

The ThinkH+ team is pleased to announce the launch of a law review:

Brainstorm

by ThinkH+

We are happy to invite you to contribute and write an article for its very first issue: “Is Aging a Disease?”

The journal will be published online in Spring 2018. Contributing writers will receive a hard copy. A paper copy will be sent to our partners (including L’Oréal and SciencesPo), to various university libraries and to the French and European Parliaments.

Why did we choose this topic?

The search for anti-aging methods has been a defining goal of transhumanism since its origin. Professor of Bioethics Arthur Caplan underlined that death, far from being a natural phenomenon, could be perceived by some as unnatural. Accordingly, the quest for the means to extend life expectancy has been a constant in the history of humanity.

But is it ethically acceptable to fight at all costs against aging? Without death, does life have meaning? Beyond considerations regarding the meaning of life, is the indefinite prolongation of life expectancy really desirable, both economically and socially? Could our legal system adapt itself to the end of death?

These are the questions that we must answer (among others!), at a time when science and technology promise to end aging.

Whether you are a scholar or simply curious, contribute and write an article now!
